Prince George of Bavaria and Archduke Leopold Ferdinand of Austria, without royal jobs, had no money. One, the Prince, has become a monk in the Benedictine order. Soon he will be locked away in a little monastery in the Bavarian Alps.

The Duke has gone on the vaudeville stage, and will do his little "turn" dressed in the uniform of an Austrian admiral, once worn at the imperial court of Vienna.

Which of the two is to be envied or pitied? One will sit, think and work for others. One will dance and sing to amuse others. Both may be quite happy, for men are variously made. Both the mole and the canary enjoy life.

Mr. Daugherty, Attorney-General, realism, although President Wilson did not, that Eugene V. Debs, whatever else he may be, is "an ordinary criminal." Mr. Daugherty sent for Mr. Debs, and Mr. Debs traveled from Atlanta to Washington without guard, talked to the Attorney-General, and was guarded, sent back to his prison.

"Ordinary criminals" sent for in that fashion would not reach the Attorney-General's office.

Eugene Debs' opinions are different from those of a hundred million Americans. But Debs is honest, possibly, has never injured any other man. It does not seem probable that Mr. Daugherty will advise or that Mr. Harding will permit keeping such a man in jail for ten years, probably to die there, with war ended and political prisoners in other countries released.

"Society thieves," it appears, are stealing jewelry from their "society friends." One lady lost an opera glass that cost $3,000. Another lost a gold pocketbook loaded with diamonds. All very sad, like the crumbled roseleaf in the bed of the epicurean.

The "society friends," it seems, lose their jewelry when they put it down to spend an afternoon playing bridge. The police are notified, but that does no good. Police are never notified about the things lost to those parties, but THAT wouldn't do any good either.

The rat, one of man's worst enemies, if he could talk and hire Levy Mayer or John Stanchfield, would have a counter claim. They used the rat in the cucumber business. They are sensitive to poison gas and told the soldiers when it was coming. In war hospitals they dissected rats in experiments on pneumonia. Now the Crocker cancer laboratory, established with money taken from the gold hills in California, announces that it has discovered a way to inoculate rats with cancer, at wholesale, 250 at a time, thus giving opportunity for wholesale study.

It is horrible to think of unfortunate creatures doomed to die of a loathsome disease. But take your choice, 10,000 rats dying every year of cancer for a few years, then cancer conquered, or a hundred thousand women and 50,000 men dying of cancer every year INDEFINITELY. Most things in life seem a choice of evils. Some sentimentalists would choose immunity for the rats, but they "eat the fly."

Nicaragua is withdrawing from the League of Nations. No complaint to make, says Nicaragua, but it really costs too much to stay in the league. If it costs Nicaragua too much, how much do you suppose it would cost the United States to be in that league? It would have cost us, to begin with, fourteen thousand millions that Europe owes us. You may say that we shall lose that anyhow. Possibly, but we, at least, have not gone into a league that would have caused the United States Treasury to finance Europe's wars.

HAWAIIAN STRIKE BARES JAP ANTI-AMERICANISM

The sixth installment of the article on the Japanese "invasion" of Hawaii, by Joseph Timmons of the Los Angeles Examiner staff, which is printed today in the Boston American, is particularly interesting in its disclosure that the American planters on the islands face the same labor menace against which the farmers of the Pacific coast have been fighting under the handicap of the belief of other parts of the country that the situation was being exaggerated.

By JOSEPH TIMMONS

A strike of Japanese laborers on the four big sugar plantations on the island of Oahu, on which Honolulu is situated, during the first half of 1920, served to prove the absolute solidarity of the entire Japanese population of the islands.

German Chemical Trade Boom Causes Concern

FOR EXPORT TRADE

Present Production in Germany Surpassing Its Before-the-War Output

New York, March 26.—Reports as to the speed with which Germany is rehabilitating its dye industry is causing concern to interests in this country, which worked during the war to establish American production on a basis which would enable it to hold the domestic market and to be a competitor of and not a slave to Germany. It is called from London that Germany is turning out dyes at the rate of 17,000 tons a year. Its pre-war production was but 13,000 tons per annum. British manufacturers are as much interested in this development as the ones in this country.

While German effort is being concentrated upon production of shades that are the most demand, it is stated that the entire present output includes between 600 and 800. Germany can make dye at one-quarter the manufacturing cost in England and much cheaper than it can be produced in the United States.

GERMAN CHEMISTS IMPORTED.

Since the end of the war, important American dye factors, such as the Du Ponts and National Aniline and Chemical Company, have imported German chemists. Whether these imports will amount to anything substantial in the way of making a real competitor remains to be seen. Dye manufacturers in this country are not sure that it is just about a generation, thirty years ago, that dye and dyestuffs were worth $12,000,000.

At that time, dyes and dyestuffs were valued at $12,000,000. With Germany's output, the value of the dye industry in 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, This Day in Our History—March 26, 1921
THIS is the anniversary of the issuing by Catton, in 1484, of "Aesop's Fables" in English. This was the first book ever printed with numbered pages, though books printed without such numbers antedated it.

"For Love" An Absorbing Romance Philip Fails to Open His Loving Heart to Eva

PART II.
The glorious summer sky had clouded over when Philip started for the house. There was a distant rumble of thunder, and now and then large drops of rain pattered down on the hood of the car.
Philip was in evasive mood and had not troubled to put on an overcoat.
"I shan't be gone half an hour," he objected, when his father asked him where he was off to. "I'm only going to fetch Eva. I promised I would."

He drove fast, but the rain was coming down in torrents by the time he reached the Denison house. From the window Eva saw her car coming in at the open gate, and her heart gave a little excited thrill.
She was quite ready to go—it never occurred to her, as it would have done to Kitty Arlington, to leave Philip to cool his heels for ten minutes or so. She came out into the hall to meet him, conscious that she was looking her best.

Storm Arising
"I think we're going to have a storm," Philip said. He got out and looked the rig around for her keys.
"There was a wife from Calligan this afternoon. He is coming down on the 5:45. You wouldn't care to go round that way and pick him up, would you?"
For the barest second Eva did not speak. She felt a sort of blank disappointment. What had she hoped for from this drive together? She hardly knew. She turned a smiling face to him.

"I should love to! I'm longing to see him," she said.
"Good!" Philip looked pleased. He had forgotten that he had intended this drive together because he wanted to have her to himself for a few moments.

"I hope you'll like Calligan," Philip said. "He is coming down on the 5:45. You wouldn't care to go round that way and pick him up, would you?"
"I think there's a chance of it," she said. "I'll take Mr. Calligan—can you get a taxi?"
"I'll take care of it," Philip said.

"Here we are," Philip said. "Eva, this is Tom—Tom, let me introduce you to Miss Denison."
"Delighted!" Calligan hastily swept off his hat, but he was so close to Eva with his eyes on her. He looked at her with a heavy heart.

"Delighted!" he said. "I'm going to reverse the order of things and congratulate you, Mr. Philip. I like you very much. I think there's a chance of it, but I'm not sure. I'll take Mr. Calligan—can you get a taxi?"
"I'll take care of it," Philip said.

GIACE, beauty, the rhythm of music, they're all in it. The dancer's body is a masterpiece of grace and beauty. The dancer's body is a masterpiece of grace and beauty. The dancer's body is a masterpiece of grace and beauty.

Bachelor Girl's Reflections

A WOMAN idealizes the fellow whom she can adore—but, alas, her heart always turns to the weakling whom she must coddle.

Matrimony is the steam roller which tones a woman down, smoothes out her sharp points of her wit and the rough edges of her temper, opens her eyes and broadens her wrinkles out of her disposition. Yet men still continue to wonder why widows are so much more fascinating than flappers and debutantes.

Narrative MAY be a "white-lie job," but a little total abstinence from domesticity surely does make the world a more interesting place. It is a perfect balance, and it is a perfect balance.

When he has a headache or a headache, a man thinks there is something serious the matter with him; when she isn't one or the other, a woman KNOWS there is something serious the matter with her.

More love matches MUST be made in heaven; the few never goes out in the other place.

Probably the reason why Solomon shines out so brilliantly, through history, as the "perfect husband," is because he has had a little competition for that honor.

The only way to live comfortably in New York nowadays is to have a lot of money—perhaps, at least, to spend your winters in Florida, the Spring in Paris, your summers in Maine and the Autumns in the Adirondacks.

BOSTON COOK BOOK
Peel and slice apples into a common bread tin until nearly full, sprinkle over them sugar, salt and nutmeg, pour on ½ cup water. Make a batter of ¼ cup of sugar, ½ cup butter, ½ cup boiling water, 1 teaspoon each of soda, ginger and cinnamon, flour enough to make a batter as for cake. Four this over the apples and bake. Serve with sauce.

BANANA PIE
Line a deep pie plate with a rich crust and bake; remove from oven. Just before serving, slice 4 or 5 bananas thin, sprinkle with sugar, set in oven to melt the sugar; whip ½ cup of cream stiff, add 1 tablespoon of sugar and pile on bananas.

CHAPTER LXIX.
MAY was prompt in reaching the restaurant indicated by Irene Lawrence. She walked briskly, growing more nervous every minute. The main door of the place opened upon a hall, at the side of which was one of the two rooms composing the restaurant.

The other was upstairs, but the lower room was not nearly full when, almost a half hour after the time she had set, Irene appeared. "I am sorry I was detained at my dressmaker's," she said after shaking hands formally with her guest.

"That is all right," Mary replied, trying to speak easily. "Suppose we can talk over privately here."

They were the only couple in the upper room. Irene selected a table at a distance from the door. "I am glad to see you," she said to her companion. "But please order anything you wish."

"Only a fruit salad and a cup of coffee for me, please," Mary said. "I feel as if I had paid for my visit to the city. I have not done this since, for I was not here when Irene Lawrence was not her superior and summoned her courage for the coming interview."

"I suppose my brother has told you of my engagement?" she said. "Yes," Mary answered. "I was so glad to hear of it. I have not done this since, for I was not here when Irene Lawrence was not her superior and summoned her courage for the coming interview."

"I am glad to hear of it," Mary said. "I was so glad to hear of it. I have not done this since, for I was not here when Irene Lawrence was not her superior and summoned her courage for the coming interview."
